The Ultimate challenge

Every year, hundreds of cyclists from around the world compete in the Tour de France, a grueling three-week race across some of the most diverse and demanding terrains in Europe.

The Yellow Jersey is an honour accorded to cyclist who has lowest cumulative time for the race at the end of each day.

The race was First organized in 1903 to increase paper sales for the magazine L' Auto.

A Tour de France Rider burns an average of 7,000 calories per day.

There are 4 different races within Tour de France, where each leader is rewarded with their own jersey and stages are flat, hilly, mountain.
